

```

bark("Eh? What? A Pagan! A Pagan here? NO! Get gone, you foul creature of the dark! Leave me or call upon the Ancient Ones I will and blast you from my sight they will!");
return;

```

==> Since we're using a different structure, we might want to consider using shorter, choppier sentences (e.g., "Leave me you must, or call upon the Ancient Ones I will. From my sight they will blast you!") Just a thought <==APM bark("Ezrekal my name is. Sorry I am, acted so rudely before I did. The mark of the Zeleans upon you see I did not.

```

Funny, not like a Zelean you look? Different you look, different you speak. If not a Pagan you are, what are you?");
askList+= << "I am from Britannia." >>;
yelledAtAvatar = false;
}

```

==> This still seems a little hard to follow. Instead of alway using the passive verb, why not use the main verb, or the active (e.g., The mark of the Zealans upon you I did not see.") Again, just a thought, but it seems more clear to me. <==APM bark("Back to the Great Cataclysm I mentioned it all goes.

```

```

==> This still seems awkward to me. I think we're still having trouble with the structure. Why don't we meet to make sure we're all on the same wavelength. It's quite possible I am the only one who is confused. <==APM

```

When ocured that did, rush to the High Priestess the people did and demanded an answer from the Ancient Ones she get on how the battles to stop. Answer her the Ancients would not. Accused her of lying the people did. Out of their village her they ran and come back they forbade her until communicated with the Ancient Ones she had. Many, many years ago that was. Still for the Ancients to speak I wait as my mother did and her mother before her.");
askList-= << "Why have you been away from your

```

```

people?" >>;

```